

Director to present employment law lecture for SMU School of Law

Janet Hendrick is an experienced employment litigator who tackles each of her client's problems with a tailored, results-oriented approach.

Janet A. Hendrick, an employment attorney and Director in Phillips Murrah's Dallas office, will share her insight and expertise with students of Southern Methodist University's Dedman School of Law later this month.

Hendrick will present on key labor and employment matters for businesses as part of the law school's Business Law Boot Camp on May 30, 2019.

"I will be teaching the Boot Camp students, who have finished their first or second year at SMU Law School, about labor and employment laws from a business perspective, with the goal of teaching them the different sources and implications of our country's workplace laws," she said. "As a SMU Dedman School of Law alum, I am delighted to have this opportunity to share my experience and insight from my years of practicing in this area."

The Boot Camp is intended to introduce vocabulary, concepts and skills needed to effectively understand how business works so students are able to communicate with and advise business clients, including as regulatory and litigation counsel, according to the law school's website.